President James Monroe, Annual Message to Congress (Monroe Doctrine), December 2, 1823 — Bryan, William Jennings, ed., Republic or Empire (1899), public domain, public domain

“We owe it therefore to candor and to the amicable relations existing between the United States and those [European] powers to declare that we should consider any attempt on their part to extend their system to any portion of this hemisphere as dangerous to our peace and safety. With the existing colonies or dependencies of any European power we have not interfered and shall not interfere. But with the Governments who have declared their independence and whose independence we have acknowledged, we could not view any interposition for the purpose of oppressing them, or controlling in any other manner their destiny, by any European power, in any other light than as the manifestation of an unfriendly disposition toward the United States.”

President Theodore Roosevelt, Roosevelt Corollary to the Monroe Doctrine, Annual Message to Congress, December 6, 1904 — Bryan, William Jennings, ed., Republic or Empire (1899), public domain, public domain

“Chronic wrongdoing, or an impotence which results in a general loosening of the ties of civilized society, may in America, as elsewhere, ultimately require intervention by some civilized nation, and in the Western Hemisphere the adherence of the United States to the Monroe Doctrine may force the United States, however reluctantly, to the exercise of an international police power in cases of such wrongdoing or impotence... We would interfere with them only in the last resort, and then only if it became evident that their inability or unwillingness to do justice at home and abroad had violated the rights of the United States or had invited foreign aggression to the detriment of the entire body of American nations.”
